NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISES.

We observe that a special express train, solely for conveyance of the Scotman parcels from printing office in Edinburgh, to the Publisher's Office at Glasgow, has been hired by the proprietors of The Scotman from the North British Railway Company, and now runs each night of the latest news up to the hour of 10.15 P. M. The recent introduction into the Scotman Office of the "Walter" beyond all comparison the best and fastest printing machine in existence—recently led by the proprietors of The Times, and in use for printing The Times and The Standard was now being put to use to provide for a greatly increased circulation. The machinery at present in the Scottman, The Scottman can now be printed at from 40,000 to 50,000 copies per hour. The new machinery is capable of printing press prints both sides of its eight page at one operation, only exceeded by two other large Newspaper offices in the world, Thorn's Mail.

recovery damages for defendant's breach of his promise to marry plaintiff, and the only question in the case was what the amount of damages to which plaintiff was entitled to recover from defendant, in consequence of his breaking the engagement he had entered into. The parties had known each other from childhood, and they had engaged to be married for a great many years, but at the time of the breach, defendant was engaged to be married to another woman.

en off his engagement without, as it seem-him, giving any clear reason for doing so.

friends of plaintiff would consent to a verdict being taken for £1,000 damages, to include costs. Sergeant Parry said that there was no doubt that defendant had made promise to marry plaintiff, and there was also no doubt that he had broken that promise. He was at the same time certainly er surprised to hear his learned friend that the engagement had been broken off out any reason being assigned for it, because if he had read the letters that had passed between the parties, he must have seen that defendant was a very great invalid, and was subject to epileptic fits, and that his condition was such that it was necessary for him to be treated and nursed. With regard to the lady, he was instructed by defendant to state, in the unqualified manner, that there was not the slightest imputation upon her character or conduct; and, on his behalf, he consented that defendant should press against him for the amount stated, which was to include costs. A verdict for the plaintiff, with £1,000 damages, was taken.

DETERMINED STORY OF A WRECK.
(South London News.)

by the American papers just to hand by the the Star steamer Baltic, we learn that a man of the bureau, Ellé d'Orson, which February 12th, for water, had brought a full story of the wreck of the Lilly Parker, a fish Fletcher, of Swansea, England, on the coast of Labrador, or on the edge of the ice, on duty at the "Left Bar" that night attracted by the whining of a dog, and, catching a lantern to his eye, were able to follow him, and were brought to the beach, where they found a man, who was about a week's 3 years old, lying almost drowned, and removed her to the "Sahara" Hospital, about half a mile distant, where the physicians were on duty, and where she lay for a following morning from the exposure. When the mother became conscious she asked where she was. Her appearance was refined and handsome. On being told by Surgeon Adward that she was safe, she said, "I am glad, and then in the hands of those who would take

Memory returning, she suddenly asked :

was, Robert F. Where is Captain Fletcher today could find the surgeon could respond that nothing was left of the wreck, Captain Fletcher might be safe. The poor lady wept bitterly for some moments, and again suddenly turning towards the surgeon, asked for her child. His death she learned of the day before. The doctor might find the lady so far recovered as to be able to narrate the incidents of her untimely fate, and hear the harrowing news that husband, Captain Fletcher, had not been seen since that day when he died. Her story is substantially as follows:

On the 3rd of January the barque Lilly left Swansea, England, bound to Lax, Nova Scotia, with merchandise and passengers, being five days; the foretopmast and main topmast were carried away by a severe gale, which lasted over 48 hours. Jury masts were promptly supplied, the Lilly proceeded on her voyage, favoured by good winds for about 10 days, after which she encountered a heavy weather, in which a large quantity of canvas foretop-gallant-mast were lost. After 30 days at sea, she encountered a violent storm, and, lost nearly all of her foremast, and was driven to the coast by a heavy sea, by a squall, and, which day, made a day in the bulwarks, and forced the ship on beam ends. Thus disabled, the barge ained until the 12th, when it was found she had drifted over 500 miles out of course, and lay nearly 100 miles from shore. Late on the night of the 12th strong north-east wind sprang up, and she rose to a fearful heave. The wind increased, and the ship lost her way. She drifted about six a log, until she drifted to the shore, striking heavily upon the submarine which stretches bevyly from the coast northern of the island. The barque filled rapidly, and the crew had to take to the water. The storm raged so wildly it was useless to suggest plan of rescue."

rather than this Mrs. Fletcher's bewilderment could not lead her. All that she could remember was that the barque was suddenly in two, and those on board were either washed into the sea, or bad time to seize some portion of the wreck before the vessel fell asunder.

Monstrousities.

On examining this series of monsters, in the "Nurenberg Chronicle," there is one point which can hardly fail to strike anyone who has some smattering of physiology, and has taken some interest in ethnology. They are all very odd, not to say ludicrous; but there is a very little invention about them. Nothing is simpler than the notion of cutting, mutilating, or outwitting the various members of the body; so that the headless man, the two-headed man, the one-eyed man, the man with a single arm, the one-legged man, the big footed man, the long-necked man, the large-eared man, and the flap-lipped man are all offshoots of a single idea. Then all the composite monsters are but offshoots of the one single idea of grafting parts of other animals upon the human form, and they are really but little invention required in carrying it out. You may boldly join two bodies together, as the Centaur, the harpy, and the lion, or you may cut a single body in half, and to another, the hairy with his tail, and the fawn, with his pointed ears and little tail of a tail, or the man, with his horns or big head. Again, several of these monsters are nothing but exaggerations of actual fact. It has long been suspected that the ancients knew more of the world than has generally been supposed; and this idea is strengthened by examining the monsters of the "Nurenberg Chronicle." For example, the man with the enormous under lip, is highly probable that the idea was taken from the narration of some traveller, who had seen one of the many savage tribes which distend their lips, either upper or lower, by the insertion of circular pieces of wood in them. The long-eared people can be accounted for in a similar manner. All ethnologists know that there are many tribes which measure the length of their ears by the insertion of wood, and cutting holes in their skins, and the women to whom, success at last in getting them to hang down on the shoulders, just as is represented in the Pannothi. As to the nation of pigmies, we all know of several tribes or nations that may very fairly be called by that name; and although they are not so very small as is represented in the woodcut, they are yet so small, that by writing by the side of an European's middle ear, the arms of the man and woman seem scarcely bigger than the children of nine or ten. The griffin monster is evidently borrowed from the Indian temples, which are covered with statues of various deities, scarcely any of which could be less than eight arms. The two-headed monster is due to the same source.

Indeed, in actual nature are to be found almost every instance of monstrosity which is represented in the "Nurenberg Chronicle," besides, which would throw the said monsters entirely into the shade. For example, the Monecelli, or one-eyed men, are designated by a wonderful number of the Indian creation—Mall-Zantou-ontica; many of which are remarkable for having a single eye placed in the midst of that part of the body which does duty for a head, and which are in consequence called by the appropriate names of Cyclops, Polyophrus, and so on. As to the one-legged man, we have the Chakras of the Chakras (the insects, some of which have more than thirty thousand eyes—a fact which infinitely exceeds the imagination of the old writers and artists). The man with their wings in their breasts are represented by the Chakras, lobsters, shrimp, and their kin, all of which have their limbs set exactly in the situation in which the old artist has placed the limbs of his headless man. Then the ant-eater, or man with many of the man-eaters, which body may be charged with the duty of catching, carrying a comparatively small body in its mouth. In the "Nurenberg Chronicle" the ant-eater is figured as using his foot as an umbrella, but neither artist nor author would have dared to describe him as using his foot in the light of a hat. Yet this is actually done by many river snails, whose florets of which may be seen floating hollowed down the stream, and being latterly blown down the centre, and acting as a hat.

There is no need to multiply instances, but we may receive it as an axiom that there exist in nature monsters for more wonderful than any exaggeration or combination that has been invented by man.—"Die Mostrin," by the Rev. G. Wood, from "The Ditch Blue."

Miss Gironda takes a trip to Hongkong for the benefit of her Mother.

Where I to attempt a Description, my Dear, I must have the Service of Bill and Vacation and Fashionable Extent, and which your Juliana has lately been an actor, I should indeed thank your patience to degree Bawdwin' on the Insane. Night after night, my Dear, have I been shining amid the sparkling Throng until the very last has come out of my Back hair, and for the Month it has been the Days of Midnight air I have been permitted by the numerous Admirers, to speak that Cough of which the principal feature is a slow flow, but which is a very serious one. I wrote to tell you of some of my charming acquaintances in Society. The Ladies are all Sweetness, and Girlish Bonaire. Since then, we have made other and more worthy acquaintances. Only the other evening we assisted at a Literary and Scientific conversation at the Rural abode of General Amalgam, who though short in stature possesses a Sole his enought for a President. I am most liberal minded man, and though a Capital Doctor, as you say, is, however, a very good deal of a far from a Bishop, and Barons, and Knights, if only Scientific, will on one occasion, years ago, he actually consorted with the Emperor to the Prince Consort. Then we have visited the Band upon the Recreation ground, which would be very Delightful if it were not always Pitch Dark; and altogether such as been the Strain upon my Nervous system, that a week ago my Medical Man commanded me to take a voyage to Hong Kong and a most agreeable one it was.

Farewell, your Juliana, with her Port and all Swollen and Red from the Crawl and, Sick from the rollin' of the Ocean waves—meekly attemptin' to write with the Curs of Savers livin' all about her ears, and the little abject every two Dips. Mamma and Me receive much attention from our fellow-passengers, only at meals nobody ever says a word except the Stunts, who are always lother' to know what I'm a doer to be next as if I'd not had to do so.

But what is at present a wait on my mind is the Stomach and Alarming adventure which related to my 'precious parent only the other night, and gave me a Turn I don't think I shall get the Better of not if I was to tell the age of Methusalem, was it over
